Company Description:

AirAdvice supplies a building diagnostic system to HVAC contractors, IAQ professionals, and building commissioning consultants that uncovers hidden indoor air quality and energy management issues and enables solutions to be easily identified and implemented. The system consists of:

- Portable monitors, placed in multiple locations within a building, accumulating continuous, real-time data over time periods typically spanning several days.
- Web-based data collection and archiving that simplifies implementation. No PCs are needed and the job site, and no software to install and maintain.
- Automatic generation of professional-grade reports that detail the performance of the building from an IAQ and energy efficiency standpoint.
- Extensive marketing and technical support to define a business model that fits each company's needs and help get started fast – and stay on track.

Based on an extensive database of experience, the report automatically details specific issues in the building, suggests possible causes, and recommends corrective actions – all of which contributes toward improving the indoor air quality in, and reducing the cost of operating the building under analysis. In short, it is an automated building commissioning system.
